Hon. Richard Blumenthal
Attorney General of the State of Connecticut
55 Elm Street
Hartford, CT 06141-0120

Dear General Blumenthal:

We are writing you to follow up on conversations with your office in which we have presented evidence of CVS/pharmacy offering for sale expired infant formula, over-the-counter medications and dairy products in Connecticut.

As you may be aware, CVS/pharmacy, the country's largest drugstore chain, has recently settled charges by the California Attorney General that CVS "routinely sold expired baby formula, over-the-counter medication and dairy products long after the expiration date,"¹ in violation of California's consumer protection laws. CVS signed a stipulated judgment (enclosed) that gives Californians enhanced protections from the potential hazards of expired products.

Under the judgment, CVS is now required to check all its California stores for expired products at least twice a month; conduct random audits for expired products in California stores twice a year; and provide compensation to each consumer who locates expired goods on CVS shelves in California. CVS also paid penalties totaling almost $1 million.

Change to Win has recently documented that CVS has sold expired products to consumers in Connecticut. CVS operates 31 stores in Fairfield County. In early May, 20 of these stores were surveyed for the presence of expired goods. Surveyors observed expired dairy, infant formula and/or medications at over half of CVS stores visited in Fairfield County (11 of 20 stores, or 55%). Expired products purchased included:

- A package of CVS brand Non-Drowsy Allergy Relief over five months past its expiration date of November 2008, purchased at the CVS store at 535 Monroe Turnpike in Monroe. Expired CVS allergy medication was also found at CVS stores in Stamford, Brookfield and Norwalk.
- At the CVS store at 1875 Boston Ave. in Bridgeport, a quart of Prosobee Lipil infant formula over three months past its January 2009 expiration date.
- A pint of Garelick Farms Light Cream nearly two weeks past its April 26th sell by date, bought at the CVS store at 6 Willard Avenue in Norwalk. And in the CVS stores in Stratford, a carton of Sauders Grade A large eggs purchased 3 days past its sell-by date.

We hope you agree that the people of Connecticut deserve the same level of protection as California residents from CVS's pattern of offering expired products for sale.

The New York State Attorney General has also taken enforcement action to protect New York consumers from expired goods at CVS. The Attorney General has filed a lawsuit charging that CVS has repeatedly sold expired products in the state, violating federal, state and local laws and breaking a 2003 assurance of voluntary compliance stemming from charges that CVS had sold expired over the counter medications. The New York suit seeks restitution for consumers who have purchased expired goods, disgorgement of revenues from the sale of expired products, civil penalties and independent random compliance checks to ensure that CVS stops selling expired products. The complaint, as well as the 2003 Assurance of Voluntary Compliance, are enclosed.

The potential hazards of expired infant formula and medication are well documented. The website of the infant formula trade group, the International Formula Council, notes that "after the expiration date, some vitamin levels decrease,"² and Baylor College of Medicine Pediatrician Sara Rizzi says, "Expired formula can accumulate moisture and have problems with spoilage and mold."³ CVS's own website warns that "Expired medications may not work as well for you, or may even be harmful."⁴

We believe that our new findings of expired goods on Connecticut CVS shelves, which reinforce the evidence we submitted to your office, suggest that now is the time for a full-scale investigation by your office to secure for consumers the same protections afforded by the strict, judicially enforceable standards CVS now must operate under in California. Please contact me if you would like to review a full list of the products purchased during our Connecticut surveys or samples of the actual products.

Sincerely,

Ahmer Qadeer
